INSIDE OUT

Inside out.

The interior of a centrifugal force.

The interior as the core of an expanding universe.

The interior of forms or plasticity in pure power.

The interior of the becoming of forms.

An interior that discovers that it finds itself, beyond itself.

An interior that escapes from its place, but insists on being considered to be interior, because that is its nature.

An interior that advances in search of another destination.

Or a wandering interior...

An interior that exists beyond itself, altered, dissatisfied, out of control, incontinent in its despair, revolt or even happiness...

Interior as a translation of the subjective, or the interior as an inner space in things such as houses.

That looks outside to see itself as someone by the window viewing itself on the street, in the landscape, or seeing itself when being seen.

Interior, or interiors, as in "interior decoration", treating the skin from the inside.

An interior that sees itself as all of these things at the same time.

The idea for this exhibition derived from a series of messages that I exchanged with Pedro Oliveira about the work "maquette" (scale model) for the exhibition at the gallery of the American artist, Tony Tasset, in 1991. The work has been kept in the collection since then and was the starting point for this new initiative. The "maquette" will be present, exhibited as a work that is too large to be minimal and too small to be architecture. A white cube without a roof, a door-like opening. An archetype of a house, or the minimum limit that permits an image (in this case an object) to be a house. If it were any smaller it would cease to exist.
